38. Many students find it hard to manage their time well, which often affects their studies. I once had a similar experience. Last term, I had a science project due on Friday. I thought I had plenty of time, so I spent my evenings playing video games instead of working on it. By Thursday night, I realized I hadn't even started. I had to stay up very late to finish it, and the result was not good. I felt tired and my grade was lower than I expected.

To manage time better, I have two suggestions. First, make a simple plan. Write down your tasks and set a specific time for each one. This helps you see what you need to do clearly. Second, avoid distractions. When you study, turn off your phone or keep it away. This way, you can focus better and finish your work faster.

Good time management is a skill that helps us learn better and feel less stressed. Let's start planning our time wisely from today.

39. Nowadays, many students can't make good use of their time and this has a bad influence on their study. Some spend too much time on computer games or social media, while others often put off their homework until the last minute. As a result, they feel stressed and tired, and their grades may drop.

To solve this problem, we should learn to manage our time wisely. First, make a daily plan and stick to it. Second, focus on one task at a time and avoid distractions. Finally, remember to take short breaks to stay energetic.

In short, good time management is the key to success. Let's start from today and make every minute count!
