NEW word in 2020 Coronavirus is this year’ s Children’ s Word of the Year. This is very interesting given that the 500 Words competition closed on 27 February 2020 the day before the first case was documented in the UK. This shows the influence of important events around the world on children’ s creativity. Highlights The word coronavirus appeared for the first time in the 500 Words stories in 2020. It is not a word that has been used before. The word has been used 459 times in the stories in 2020, with 287 of them as coronavirus, 168 as corona virus, and 4 as corona-virus. It is amazing that many of the themes young writers explored in fiction soon became a reality with the world in lockdown. Examples The nurses came running over. I felt a pain in my neck, I started to gasp for air. My body started shaking I couldn’ t control myself. My eyes rolled to the back of my head, a mask covered my mouth, my temperature raised and I have the coronavirus. (The Ex, girl 13) A few years later he finally landed on earth ... but when he landed he found out a deadly virus had struck earth, the corona virus ... (Bob’ s Trip Around the Universe, boy 10)

“Look at Amy’s picture!” Mom said, too loud. She does that when she’s excite, because she can’t hear herself. Some kids turned to stare at us and I wanted to hide. I led my family into my classroom and looked around. Other kids and parents were there, but I didn’t see Evelyn. Ms. Jennings walked over to us. I introduced her to my family and explained that my parents are deaf. “Oh,” she said. “Well, how do you say ‘Welcome!’ in sign language?” “Like this.” I swept my open right hand in toward my body, palm (掌心) up. She repeated the movement.

“Thank you,” Mom said, smiling. “It’s nice to meet you.” Ms. Jennings looked surprised. “You speak very well,” she said. In sign language, I repeated what Ms. Jennings had said in case my parents hadn’t read her lips (嘴唇). Mom nodded. “I lost my hearing as a child, after I’d learned to talk. Amy’s father was born deaf. He can talk, too, but he’s shy about his voice.” Dad smiled in agreement. Some of my classmates were watching us and whispering. Then I noticed Evelyn and her mom standing by the door. “I sit over there,” I told my family and quickly walked toward my desk. “Hi, Amy,” Evelyn said suddenly. I turned around. “Hi.” “I didn’t know your parents are deaf,” she said. “Yeah.” I couldn’t think of anything else to say. “And you can talk to them with your hands? That’s so cool.” “You think so?” I asked. I exhaled with relief. Evelyn nodded. “It’s like a secret code. Would you teach me some words sometime?” I smiled. “Of course.” “One of my dad’s neighbours uses sign,” she said. “Maybe I can surprise her with a greeting next time I visit my dad.” “Your dad doesn’t live with you?” I said. She shook her head. “My parents are separated.” “Oh, I...” I’d been so worried about my family that I hadn’t thought about Evelyn’s family. “Hey, if you come over tomorrow, we can practice some sign language then.” 1 got my parents’ attention. “Mom, Dad,” I said, signing, “I’d like you to meet my friend Evelyn and her mom.”

Christo calls it The London Mastaba. It is his first major outdoor art sculpture in Great Britain. The artwork is in the shape of a mastaba. It looks somewhat like a pyramid with a fat top. The London Mastaba is about 65 feet high, 98 feet wide and 130 feet long, and it weighs about 1.3 million pounds. The metal barrels can be seen from hundreds of feet away.

Everyone who looks at it will see something different. Many will think the barrels are barrels of oil in the heart of one of London’ s oldest parks. They might wonder if Christo was making an announcement against pollution. Others will see a prism or giant pixels or simply a shape. However, everyone must decide for themselves, the 83-year-old artist said. Christo said he had nothing special in mind when he created The London Mastaba. “There are no messages,” Christo said. “There is something in it to discover yourself. I cannot direct you.” “A Stairway To The Sky” “It’ s created a giant invitation, like a stairway to the sky,” Christo said. The artist was standing on the banks of the Serpentine Lake in Hyde Park where his artwork floats. Swans are swimming nearby. Some barrels are red with a white candy stripe on the sides. Others are colored blue, purple and red. Their colors will look different as the light changes, Christo said. Their reflection (倒影) in the lake will be like an abstract painting. Abstraction is an artistic style that does not always show something recognizable or realistic. “Not Really Sure How I Feel About It” Many people walking in the park were surprised to see the artwork. “It’ s very modern, but this place is nature and historical. I don’ t like it here,” said Yasmin KocOzcengel, who is a tourist from Turkey. Another person who took a look at the artwork was Anna Andronova. She called The London Mastaba very brave. If it weren’ t as brave, it wouldn’ t be as amazing, she said. Sheila Seffenson is an American living in London. “I’ m just not really sure how I feel about it,” Steffenson said. “Maybe it’ s a message about pollution. Who knows?”
